RESTORING HISTORY

LYNBROOK OF ANNAPOLIS

A team of custom builders, archeologists, and a dendrochronologist meticulously restored and rebuilt this 18th-century colonial home. They took core samples from the framing timbers of the original structure so they could preserve the historic integrity during the restoration and rebuild, thus conforming with the restoration standards laid out by the National Park Service. Certain modern systems had to be brought in, such as heating, cooling, lighting, electrical wiring, fire suppression, and plumbing. However, these elements were disguised so the house could retain its original appearance, which reflects the period when it was built.
